- A courageous path through grief
- Told in a sensitive and stirring way
- An affirming book for everyone who has lost someone close to them

When her 17-year-old son dies in a traffic accident, Flor Schmidt realizes that the extremes of life are often unbelievably close to each other: Death, horror and pain on the one hand – grace, happiness and love on the other. On her path through the grief, she searches for answers that cannot exist and ultimately finds something that is much more valuable: an intensive inner connection to her deceased son, which helps her to accept life and love it as it is. And the trust that death is not just an end but can also be a new start.

About the author

Flor Schmidt is a German philologist and grief counsellor. She offers herb seminars, holds lectures and is a cofounder of JugendLichter, a discussion group for parents who have also lost an adolescent child. She lives in Freiburg with her family.
